Finding Strength in Grief

Over the past months, you have been living with your loved one’s absence. You may be starting to fully acknowledge their death while living in your new reality. Day by day you are slowly adjusting to this “new normal” by finding your own rhythm and routine. Not only are you missing your loved one but also their role in your life and your family’s life. Everyday activities (preparing meals, doing dishes, managing paperwork) and milestone accomplishments (birthdays, weddings, anniversaries) take great strength and courage to face. You may experience a mixture of joy, sorrow, or resentment that your loved one is not sharing in these events with you. At times, you may feel stuck and find it hard to grasp that life can keep going on without them. It is important to acknowledge your pain and struggles while reminding yourself that you can and will survive. Take one step at a time and know each step is a courageous one.

Part of grief involves reviewing the relationship that was. It is an opportunity to reflect on where you have been and where you hope to go. Those who died played a role in shaping the person you are. They have left part of themselves with you, and it may feel like they took a part of you with them. Take some time to reflect, gather your memories, and consider how your loved one will continue to influence your life.

HELPING YOURSELF HEAL
Part of the healing process is getting to know the “new you” and the “new normal.” Taking time to ask questions can help you sort through this new reality. Thinking, sharing in grief support groups, talking with friends, or writing in a journal can help you clarify where you have been, where you are now, and what happens next.

Take some time to reflect on these questions.

• What responsibilities did I have that are no longer there? What new responsibilities have I assumed? How have these new responsibilities changed me?
  • What skills am I no longer using? What new skills have I learned?
  • What old habits and routines no longer work for me? What new habits and routines am I developing?
  • What areas of my life do I feel in control of? Not in control of?
  • What gave me a sense of purpose before? What part changed or remains? What gives me purpose now?

CONTINUING THE RELATIONSHIP
As you continue to reflect and change, it may be helpful to find ways to incorporate your loved one in your life. Remember that grief is unique. It is important for you to do things that give YOU comfort. Here are some things others have found helpful as they remember their loved one and continue the relationship.

• Make a memory book/box of photos/mementos of your loved one. Invite friends and/or family to contribute.
• Enjoy the foods they enjoyed.
• Imagine what advice they would offer when you are making tough decisions.
• Live your life in a way they would be proud of.
• Finish a project they were working on or adopt a hobby they enjoyed.

Are you looking for a way to honor your loved one?
For more information on the memorial opportunities below, contact Unity at 920-338-1111 or visit www.unityhospice.org.

Unity’s Forget-Me-Not Ornament – Honor your loved one in a lasting way with the Forget-Me-Not Keepsake Ornament. Handcrafted from fine porcelain, each ornament includes an inspirational message. Ornaments are available for $10 each.

Unity’s Gardens – Located on our 34 acre campus in De Pere, the gardens offer beautiful outdoor spaces for meditation and reflection. When you dedicate an engraved brick, a garden element or a stone bench you contribute to the atmosphere of care and healing. The Unity Memorial Garden and Brick Dedication is held the third Thursday of August at Unity. All garden tributes made before June 1 are formally dedicated at this ceremony.
